Journey to the Cross Brings Hundreds to Experience Easter Story »

"Let's get some of that bread, it's so good," said a young visitor to his friend and they quickly disappeared in the market crowd. They were among a group of participants experiencing a "Journey to the Cross" and a Passover celebration staged in a makeshift Jerusalem marketplace at Loveland's Campion Academy gymnasium March 25-26.

The 2016 Easter event was a new edition of what became a popular destination in Loveland a year ago. This year, 525 visitors walked through busy and colorful streets illustrating what it might have been like during the momentous events in Jerusalem two millennia ago.

Walking through the street, visiting shops, watching a potter shaping his wares on a kiln, tasting peanuts and considering buying jewelry and African crafts, visitors mixed with Roman centurions, priests, beggars and proceeded toward a crucifixion of Jesus reenactment on the gymnasium stage. A stroll through the first century Jerusalem market set the stage for a final part of the Easter story reenactment, a play about the principal events of the Holy Week.

The play's culmination saw the empty tomb with Christ mingling with onlookers and angels. If you were among the audience, you could see mouths open and teary eyes. "This was awesome," said a girl holding her mom's hand. "Can we see it again?" The play was written, directed and managed by Natalie Issa Barton from Thornton. "She was also the angel welcoming Christ from the tomb," Stenbakken said. "It was a truly cooperative effort to bring the story to be experienced by many visitors."

Following the experience of crucifixion and resurrection, visitors were invited to an exhibit of Bibles -- old, new and in several language versions -- displayed in the church multipurpose room where refreshments were also served. Among two dozen copies or portions of the Bible, those that attracted attention and inquisitiveness were original copies of Scripture from the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, including a 1738 English New Testament.

This entire multi-part concept of the most significant Christian story was conceived of and produced by Dick Stenbakken, a member of the Campion Seventh-day Adventist Church. Dressed in period attire of a Roman News Nuggets is your publication. We strive to provide news and information that expresses our church life. Every church, every family, every individual has a story to tell. We are inviting pastors and secretaries of churches and institutions within the Rocky Mountain Conference to share with us relevant information -- about developments, issues, notable events, as well as experiences of church members.

Please email your story to nuggets@rmcsda.org so we can share how God is working through His people in your territory. When submitting your Tribune, Stenbakken is already thinking about next Easter season. "We have had many positive comments on this outreach program and plan to do new things next year," he said.

The event saw the creativity of volunteers, most of whom came from the Campion church, but Greeley's Adventure Club and Ft. Collins' church also had supporting people involved. "After totaling the people staffing the booths and on the stage, the number of participants came close to 100. Volunteers were very creative in decorating their own areas and booths. Dozens of Campion Academy students participated by being part-time staff in the booths, and three of the five Roman soldiers were also Campion students," he told NewsNuggets.

"We had quite a number of young adults participating, so the goal of working as a team with the students and the church at large was a resounding success," Stenbakken said.

Recognizing that the Easter story is about the biggest miracle of all, Stenbakken said that the staging and all that was contributed to staging the "Journey to the Cross" had its small miracles. "Our miracle was that by noon on Monday, we had the village emptied, down, transported and stored. All by noon," he concluded. ## Grand Junction Church Reenacts Da Vinci's The Last Supper »

In a darkened sanctuary, the stage lights illuminated a reenactment of the Luke 22 Last Supper painted by Leonardo da Vinci.

The congregation listened reverently to a presentation of the soul-searching thoughts of each of the 12 disciples as they contemplated the meaning of the words of Jesus saying that one of them would betray Him.

The re-enactment was presented during the Sabbath morning worship hour at the Grand Junction Seventh-day Adventist Church before Easter Sunday.

Narrated by retired pastor Gordon Weidemann, it was organized by Sandy Carosella and Sandi Adcox, leaders in

Adventists in Wyoming Display Generosity for Church Growth »

In spite of the recent economic worries for the state of Wyoming, Seventh-day Adventist believers act not only with a good business plan, but also by making it effective. Their stewardship is making church growth a reality.

Three years ago, when Al Williams, now assistant to the president for Awaken Wyoming, and Gordon Henderson, retired pastor, prayed over Wyoming prior to camp meeting, they had no idea that God had such big plans. A conversation with then-president Gary Thurber spurred them to begin fundraising for what would become Awaken Wyoming, a continuing effort to awaken people in Wyoming to Jesus -- those in the church as well as those outside it.

By the end of camp meeting, they had pledges for $190,000 and the camp meeting offering brought it up to $235,000. They were well on their way to funding Awaken Wyoming with the $500,000 that Thurber believed they would need.

Over the next few months, Williams wrote a business plan with input from Wyoming pastors and Gary Force developed a youth group called Wyoming Waldensians.

Since that original prayer offered just before camp meeting, they've raised a total of $330,000 and have $60,000 in pledges. The members of the Wyoming churches are awakening to what God can do when they pray and they're committed to Him.

One far-flung area of Wyoming has traditionally had one pastor covering seven churches. Thanks to the funds from Awaken Wyoming, Jason Logan now ministers to just five churches. "We put it out as a fleece," explains Pastor Logan. If the conference would make it five churches instead of seven, we would take the job."

"We have," says Williams, "the best contingency of pastors Wyoming has ever had."

Four Bible workers have been hired to work in Wyoming and two more will soon be added. These Bible workers cover Laramie, Newcastle, Sheridan, Rock Springs, Lander, Riverton and Rawlins, seven of the fifteen Wyoming churches.

Upton church member, Howard Bogue, has given Bible studies to the men at the Honor Conservation Camp in Newcastle every week for the past ten years. He recently baptized Isaac Parker who had been an Adventist, but slipped away into things that landed him in prison.

"Once in awhile," Howard explains, "I receive a phone call from one of the guys who has been released from prison." One inmate who had used and sold drugs, yet had attended his Bible studies faithfully for two years, received notice that he would be leaving for a substance abuse program in Casper.

Eighteen months later, Howard received a phone call from this former inmate who was now in a work-release program. He was calling to express his thankfulness for the direction he was given and to express determination to stay away from the substance abuse that had controlled his life for so many years.

"My greatest reward," explains Howard, "Is when guys call to express appreciation and reaffirm that they are continuing to be faithful."

Located in the northeast corner of Wyoming with a population under 35,000, the city of Gillette is home to the Gillette Seventh-day Adventist Church. Attendance there usually runs between 18 and 25. Lately, however, their attendance has soared to 45, due in part to the Adventurer Club that meets on Wednesday nights. The parents of these children come with their children for the adult Bible study and attend the Sabbath church services too. A newly-baptized church member picks them up and chauffeurs them to church. He has to make several trips to get them all there.

Not long ago, one of the parents of these Adventurers asked if they could have their children dedicated. When the others got wind of it, they wanted their children dedicated, too. On April 9, Pastor Chuck Gadway will dedicate seven children whose parents are not yet members of the church.

"I've been to every church in Gillette," said one recently-baptized church member, "and this is where I feel the Spirit of God is." One Sabbath, she brought seven visitors with her to church.

The Sheridan church is located in the northern part of central Wyoming. The Bible worker there prayed that God would bring people to him. He knocked on a door one day only to discover it was not the house he was looking for. But the people said, "We want Bible studies. I was an Adventist 30 years ago and my father was an Adventist. My wife and I were just talking about finding a Seventh-day Adventist church. Can you give us Bible studies?" This Bible worker is involved with 15 Bible studies in response to his prayer.

Recognizing the momentum that we are witnessing in Wyoming, Ed Barnett, president of Rocky Mountain Conference stated, "I have been impressed with the sincere desire of the Wyoming people to finish the work. It is encouraging to see the effectiveness of our Bible workers reaching people in their territories in a variety of mission activities. Several people have remarked to me that there is a new spirit in Wyoming. It's good to see them so energized." [Carol Bolden; Photo by :Isaac Parker being baptized by Howard Bogue]

There are moments in a day, whether you are dealing with your family, work or even a church setting, when relationships can go sour. Someone said something, you said something. You snap. With situations and issues calling for crisis management, which could happen even in the church setting, Ron Price's advice fits well the situations we encounter (though don't have to) between believers.

Price owns and operates Productive Outcomes, Inc. where he provides mediation and arbitration, as well as life and marriage coaching, and workplace training. A member of Farmington, New Mexico, Seventh-day Adventist congregation, Ron's advice and thoughts on spirituality have appeared in the RMC Mountain Views.

Here is good news -- his advice on how to avoid disputes, manage conflict and move from conflict to cooperation is available in his new e-book on Amazon today, April 1. Ron Price says that getting P.L.A.Y. N.I.C.E. published realizes a dream of 20 years or more in the making. The book will sell for $0.99 during the month of April. "The work is not finished yet. New ways to reach out to our communities are needed. We can't just continue to do the same old things. We must be creative in the way we reach out. We have to consider who our audience is and what our marketplace is like today. Jesus must be shared in new and persuasive ways. May the Lord help us to finish the work."
